NFL PLAYER COMES HOME & BRINGS SURPRISE GUESTS TO HOST FREE FOOTBALL CAMP

Oklahoma City, OK- Oklahoma native and professional athlete, Jeff Richards will be coming home to host a free football youth at Del City High School.

July 13th at 8 a.m. The Richards Foundation is partnering with local nonprofit Young Dreamers Foundation to impact inner city and underserved youth across the metro area. Richards is taking his love for football and the lessons the sport has taught him to motivate youth.

“I graduated from Del City High School,” Richards said. “I have witnessed kids in our community within the OKC area that feel discouraged due to lack of opportunities. I had and still have a great support with my parents, wife, family and friends; I just want to support some kids and let them know anything is possible.”

Initially in 2012, Richards played in the Canadian Football League, winning a Grey Cup before he started his NFL career in 2016. Since being in the NFL, Richards has used his off season to mentor youth and host community events such as back to school giveaways for poverty stricken youth, “Hate the Skate” where youth was encouraged to stop violence with OKC Thunder’s Terrance Ferguson, and free football camps with hip-hop legend Snoop Dogg.

The camp will cover skills training and motivational speaking. Youth will receive lunch and a shirt for participating. This year’s camp will have several NFL athletes as coaches, including Steven Parker, former University of Oklahoma alum and Big 12 Champion.
